WARNING ! ! !

Do not read this book straight through from beginning to end! These pages contain many different adventures you can go on in Lost In The Woods. From time to time as you read along, you will be asked to make a choice. Your choice may lead to success or disaster!

The adventures you take are a result of your choice. You are responsible because you choose! After you make your choice, follow the instructions to see what happens to you next.

Remember—you cannot go back! Think carefully before you make a move! One mistake can be your last . . . or it may lead you to fame and fortune!

Summary

You get lost in the woods while camping. You have to find a way back to your campsite. Will it require a map from a werewolf? Or will you perish along the way? Depending on your choices, YOU may find yourself reunited with your family with amazing adventures to tell. The wrong choice could turn you into a hungry bear's next lunch.

You were camping with your family when you decided to wander off. You regret doing that because now you're lost in the woods! You don't know what to do and are completely lost.

As you're wandering in the woods you stumble across a path. As you walk up the path you encounter a fork in the road. The right path looks inviting and clear while the left path is overgrown, full of plants, and barely noticeable.

You decide to take the right path because it will be less hard to make your way through. It is also clear so that means that some amount of society has been here. As you walk you come across a cave in the side of a hill. The cave might be home to some dangers but if it isn't then it would be a great place to wait inside for your rescue.

You think that you should take the left path and definitely explore it to see all it has to offer. You could always back track and go down the right path later anyways. As you walk down the path you notice a swamp off to the side of the path. It would be a nice place to explore and might even have a way to get back to your campsite.

You think that the path is safer than a swamp, so you keep on walking down the path avoiding the swamp. It is beginning to become dark so as you walk down the road you look for good places to shelter in. Soon, you find a cabin and a cave at the end of the path. The cabin doesn't have any lights turned on and could be home to anything, but then again the cave could be home to anything as well.

You decide to walk over to the swamp because it might have interesting things to look at or to find. When you walk over to the swamp something in the water starts bubbling. You watch as a werewolf like being emerges from the swamp, half human and half wolf. You could run or you could interact with it, it looks menacing and could probably eat you in one bite.

This is a secret slide why and how did you go here? You can't even get here normally by clicking hyperlinks. Did you cheat and read the book from front to end, if so then that's not how a CYOA works. It doesn't matter, anyways, you're going to have to go back to the beginning and reread it like anybody reading a normal CYOA.

You decide that a cave would be too dangerous to go inside so you just feel like playing it safe. You keep on walking down the trail and listen to the peaceful birds chirping. You start to feel hungry and conveniently notice a berry bush sitting right beside the path. You are hungry but the berries look unfamiliar and could be poisonous.

You think no matter the risk a cave would be the perfect shelter from the elements to wait for your rescue. What's wrong with a couple of bats anyways? As you walk inside it feels kind of creepy in the dark. Just as you start to relax and your eyes are getting adjusted to the dimness you hear deep breathing in the cave, you are not alone. A bear emerges from the darkness, you must act fast, will you run or play dead?

You think that going into the cabin might be a little bit safer. The door is unlocked so you go in. Nothing looks particularly dangerous and you notice a hammock in the far corner. You fall asleep quickly. In the morning you wake up and find a radio in the cabin. You quickly call and a helicopter comes and rescues you in a little bit.

You try to run away from the werewolf because you think it will kill you or eat you if you don't. So, you start running away and as you look back, you see the werewolf chasing you. Then before you know it, you fall off a cliff because you were too busy looking back at the werewolf. You fall silently, hitting the ground before you realize the danger you're in.

"Hi." you nervously say to the werewolf.

"Don't be scared of me little human" said the werewolf, "I am friendly, would you like a map back to your campsite?"

You can't believe your luck, a friendly werewolf that is offering you a free map back home?

"Yes please" you say trying to show as little fear as possible.

You decide you can't risk eating a poisonous berry so you keep on walking. It starts to get late and you still can't find any reliable food. You start to get weary and wander off of the path into a clearing. Just as you reach the middle of the clearing you are swept off your feet and hung upside down on a tree branch. You are trapped.

You decide to eat the berries and find them very sweet and not at all poisonous. You decide to make a small tent out of logs and leaves and learn how to make a fire. As you wait for your rescue you basically make a small camp beside the berry bush feeding off its nurturing fruit and drinking from a clean stream not far away. You wait for days upon weeks for the rescue team to come but they never do. You spend the rest of your life waiting for the day you will be rescued inside your camp. It never comes.

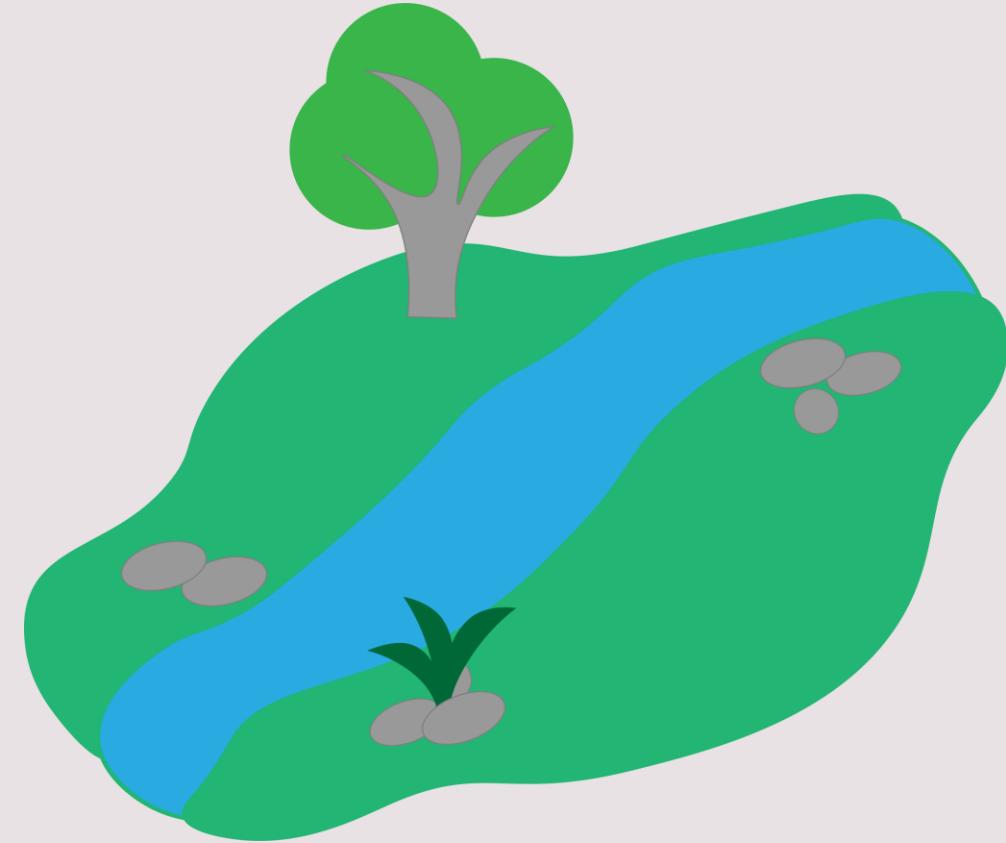

The End

You turn around and sprint away as fast as you can. You recall someone in your memory saying to walk away from a bear slowly but that's nonsense in your predicament. You run as fast as you can and try to avoid branches or roots that will trip you. You come across a river on the side of the path. The bear is gaining behind you. You could jump over the river and maybe lose the bear, but the river is wide and you could fall in. You could also not take the risk and keep on running down the path. The bear is almost to you, you need to make a quick decision.

You decide playing dead is the best option so you dramatically fall backwards and lie on the ground playing dead. The bear comes over to you and you hold your breath hoping the bear will not bite you. The bear sniffs you and opens its mouth showing a wide array of teeth. It leans over you and just as you think it will bite you, it licks you and walks away looking for other prey.

You sleep through the night upside down and wake up in the morning to see someone upside down. Then you remember that you are in a trap upside down.

"Hey, could you get me out of this trap?" you ask the person.

"Sure, I only put up this trap so that I could get some meat!" said the person happily.

The next day, you sit around the campfire with your family and share stories of your adventures, all thanks to the man who found you in the trap and brought you back to the campsite.

The End

You decide to take the risk and jump. You jump and amazingly you just make it across the river. Landing on the river bank you turn around to see the bear unable to reach you. The bear tries to wade through the water but recoils his hand as soon as it touches the water. You are safe and you have survived the bear but you are still lost and cannot find the campsite.

You decide following the path is the safer option and continue running down the path. Somehow a root you failed to notice is poking out of the ground and you trip on it falling face first into the path. The bear gains on you and you watch miserably as the bear eats you from the feet to the head, feasting on its meal.

"Here is a map for you to follow to get to the campsite" The werewolf responded.

"Thank you" you reply.

The werewolf points you in the right direction and you head off, amazingly arriving at the campsite safe and sound. You tell your family about all the amazing adventures you had in the past day.
